Review of EMS Attack Yields Recommendations

By Candy Farlow

Accomack County Public Safety Director Jason Loftus has issued a report calling for numerous changes in the way some emergency calls are handled. The report was sparked by the Feb. 4 incident during which a county-employed fire medic was assaulted while responding to a call.

At approximately 5:30 p.m. that day, Oak Hall Rescue was paged out to a psychiatric call. Two Accomack County fire medics responded in an ambulance and were told by the 911 Center that the Sheriff’s Office had been notified.

According to the report, when the medics arrived on the scene, the patient was outside his residence and walking toward them. After the rescue crew got out of the ambulance, the patient rushed forward and struck one of the medics on the left side of the head with a closed fist, causing a laceration above his left eye. The other medic ran to an adjacent residence and called the 911 Center, indicating an immediate need for law enforcement to respond.

According to Loftus’ report, the injured medic was dazed from the first impact and unable to defend himself and subsequently received several more blows to his head from the patient. The medic attempted to back away from the assailant and move toward his vehicle. During his retreat, however, he tripped over a rope that had been strung between two posts and fell to the ground on his back as the patient continued to strike him about the head. The medic was eventually able to free himself and sought refuge in the ambulance.

The second medic received a call from a friend who is also a Virginia State Police trooper who, in turn, notified VSP dispatch to send any available trooper to the scene. Fire units from NASA Wallops Flight Facility responded after monitoring the request for assistance.

Loftus’ report also includes a transcript of the communication between the 911 Center, the patient and the medics, as well as between the center and the Accomack County Sheriff’s Office.

In light of the entire situation and subsequent investigation, the report recommends that the Department of Public Safety (DPS):

- make it mandatory that DPS employees carry their assigned portable radio while on duty;
- develop a policy for response to mental/behavioral/psychological emergency calls;
- provide an in-service for staff and other Emergency Medical Services (EMS) personnel with regard to providing proper communications during intense situations;
- always have a DPS supervisor on duty to address and respond to staff needs;
- develop a policy for notification of administrative staff.

As the incident related to the 911 Center, the report recommends that:

- calls to the 911 Center without an underlying medical emergency be transferred to the Sheriff’s Office;
- a policy be developed providing specific direction for dispatchers as to when and how to request a response from the Sheriff’s Office;
- the possibility of an “Emergency All-Call” policy for law enforcement be evaluated;
- policy addressing responsiveness to field providers be modified and/or adhered to;
- dispatch supervisors be held accountable for the actions of subordinates;
- one channel be reserved for dispatch communications and announcements;
- adoption of standardized language when checking for the need of assistance from the Sheriff’s Office be considered;
- a policy be adopted for clearing a channel for EMS personnel to declare an emergency or “May (Continued on Page 13)

School Board Votes to Close Northampton Middle School

By Ron West

The Northampton County School Board voted last Wednesday to officially close Northampton Middle School at the end of the term in June.

Citing a major budget crunch and unexpected repairs that would need to be done at the school, Superintendent Dr. Richard Bowmaster asked the School Board to vote for a budget package proposed by the Central Office staff. As a result of the board’s action, students in grades pre-K through 7 will attend both Occohannock and Kiptopeke elementary schools and Grades 8 through 12 will attend Northampton High School.

Bowmaster pointed out that the declining student enrollment and changes in the composite index, which is used to calculate state funding, have resulted in a decrease in state funding.

Supervisor Spencer Murray, who until December 2007 had served on the School Board, told the standing-room-only crowd that the funding changes would reduce state money by $1.9 million, about a 17.3 percent.

“We have to make some drastic changes,” Murray said. “The middle school is not a new issue. We were planning to use QZAB (Qualified Zone Academic Bond) funds to repair the restrooms and locker rooms, but now that funding will be shifted to help pay for repairs at the high school. If changes are not made in the budget, the Board of Supervisors will need to raise taxes drastically.”

Jeff Walker, chairman of the Board of Supervisors, concurred.

The Eastern Shore Post recently published the salaries of Central Office personnel in the Northampton County Public School System because the figures had been a matter of some discussion with respect to recent news events. In response to the resulting requests we have received from readers for similar information concerning other county officials, the Post is offering the following salary figures which we have received under the Freedom of Information Act.

While the precise job titles do not always match between Accomack and Northampton counties, these are the management positions which were presented by county officials.

Size of County Budget Dismays Citizen

By Linda Cicoira

A real-estate agent from Hallwood gave the Accomack County Board of Supervisors some financial advice last Wednesday.

“I am stunned by the size of Accomack County’s budget,” said Toni Trepanier. “In my opinion, it is totally disproportionate to our population and the average income of our taxpayers.

“I can only hope this budget will be reviewed again and where possible, be reduced, particularly as it pertains to capital improvements and job creation,” she continued.

“It appears our county staff has grown faster than our population,” she said. “These are difficult economic times and belt tightening is necessary.”

Trepanier spoke during the public participation portion of the supervisor’s monthly meeting. She said that rather than fund “new luxury green box facilities,” that money should be spent on increased fire/rescue/ambulance services.

“It is my understanding that the cost of one new trash facility is approximately $680,000,” she said, not disputing how nice the facilities are. “I suggest that part of that money would go a long way towards paying a living wage and retirement benefits to those who risk life and limb routinely for us, and part could be allocated for equipment to help them help us.”

Trepanier said she sent out an e-mail survey asking how people prefer their money be spent and “only one person voted for additional green box facilities and one abstained” from making an opinion. She did not disclose how many people participated.

Regarding health insurance, Trepanier said, “Elected county officials are not employees and are often employed elsewhere or are self-employed or retired, with benefits provided from other sources. So I suggest that elected county officials with health insurance available from other sources, voluntarily remove themselves from the county insurance plan.”

Trepanier also said that the “basic principles of appraisal do not appear to have been utilized in this recent re-assessment. I have performed considerable research and found very little consistency or justification for some of the huge increases and, in some cases, insufficient increases, particularly on waterfront estates.”

The budget proposal includes approximately $65,000 for a new in-house real-estate assessor. The total package is more than $50 million. About $27 million of that is local money.
No Movement From Accomack Board on Sewage Ordinance

By Linda Cicoira

The majority of Accomack supervisors voted last Wednesday to postpone changing the county’s sewage disposal ordinance, a move that could prohibit the use of lagoons for septic waste.

“I was pretty disappointed,” said Supervisor Grayson Chesser following the meeting. Chesser was the only supervisor who had announced he was “ready to vote right now.”

“All they are is big privies. We haven’t made any progress in the 400 years since we’ve got here,” he said.

“It’s something that has to be done as quickly as possible,” Chesser continued. He added that viewing the lagoons was what convinced him the action is necessary.

“I would like the board to go there and look at these lagoons,” Chesser said. “I’m not saying close it tomorrow or close it next week. But we’ve got to close it. The time for dilly dallying is over.”

Officials have said that there are three unlined lagoons in the county and that two of those have been closed by the sewage hauling companies that own them.

Chairman Ron S. Wolff commended Boggs Water & Sewage and Bundick’s Well and Pump Co. for “solving two-thirds of the problem” when they stopped using two of the lagoons.

The issue came to light in November when County Administrator Steve Miner reported that the haulers “are being required to hire third-party consultants and develop operation and maintenance manuals for their lagoons. … The state may force these businesses into expensive solutions. … Helping them benefits all the county since we rely on them to help keep our ground-water clean and our house sanitary.”

“We have done everything asked of us,” one of the haulers, Jimmy Bundick, told the board. In 1976 when a lagoon near Painter was opened, it met all restrictions, he added. Since then, he said he has always obtained permits to keep it in operation.

Recently, Bundick said, he had to pay $10,000 for test samples. In addition, he learned that to replace the lagoon would cost $1.2 million and then would be given only a one-year permit.

“A year-to-year permit would not be acceptable,” he said, adding that it is a big decision for each resident who “has a bathroom.”

Bundick said he charges $250 to pump a septic tank even though it costs him $284 to do so. He complained that his fuel bill for January totaled $24,700 and that he is hauling some of the sewage to Pocomoke, Md.

Bundick also reported that the state is considering requiring those houses in areas that now pump their systems every five years to do so annually.

“I don’t want us in a bind that we won’t have a place to dump,” said Supervisor Wanda Thornton. She wants to wait to amend the ordinance until after the northern landfill septic system is expanded.

Supervisor Donald Hart agreed. “I think we have to be very careful,” he said. “We have to have somewhere before we close them down … before we do something rash; we need to do something careful. I don’t want to get caught with our pants down if all of a sudden, 39,000 people would not pump their septic tanks.”

Public Works Director Stewart Hall originally had estimated that expanding the landfill’s system would take about a year. More recent inquiries have led him to believe it could take 21 months. He said that once operational, the system could handle “maybe half of what’s being pumped.”

Hart said he is concerned that total dependence on one system could leave the county in dire straits in heavy rains or storms and that if the system failed, untreated waste would be discharged into Assawoman Creek.

“It is always a possibility with any system,” said Hall.

“That’s the same possibility now” with the lagoons, said Supervisor Steve D. Mallette, who wants the haulers to work on getting long-term contracts with the Pocomoke plant.

“I think we need to look into recycling (waste) water, possibly by land applying,” Chesser said later. “I seriously think you shouldn’t (even) allow lined lagoons. I want to know a lot more.”

Chesser said he also is concerned about the creek. “Millions of dollars of seafood is at risk in a storm event.”

Still, he said he doubted it would be as bad as what could happen with an unlined lagoon.

He wants everyone involved in the process to meet. “If you’re going to discuss this, you need to have all the people available.”

The proposed ordinance was advertised for public hearing with the strictest rules, as recommended by County Attorney Mark Taylor, so that the document could be adjusted without the need for further postings.

No one spoke at the hearing.

At last week’s meeting, the supervisors also voted to:

• change the start of the public session of the monthly meeting from 7 p.m. to 6 p.m.;
• change the name of the county’s Industrial Development Authority to Economic Development Authority;
• abandon Route 9641, the access road to the former Parksville Middle School, and Route 840 (Cutler Lane), from the secondary state highway system;
• approve spending $2,000 in Election District 1 funds for lights on the North Accomack Little League ballfield;
• approve spending about $300 in Election District 2 funds to cover landfill tipping fees and other costs associated with the Bayside Community clean-up;
• approve spending an undisclosed amount of Election District 3 funds to buy plants and landscaping materials for Hornetown Convenience Center;
• pass a resolution that asks the Virginia Association of Counties to initiate and support a “grass-roots” effort toward citizen petitions to initiate amendments to the state constitution allowing the financing of capital improvements for Virginia’s public schools at the state level and to provide citizens with advance notification of “the local costs of legislation considered by the General Assembly”;
• request a state variance for an emergency medical technician (EMT) class taught at Parksville Volunteer Fire Company so that instruction could continue for the 41 participants. This would allow the course to be taught by one instructor while a certification issue with the second instructor is handled.

Daughter of Murder Victim Pleads With Others to Contact Parole Board

By Candy Farlow

It was July 16, 1990, when one of the most horrendous crime scenes ever found on the Shore was discovered. That was the day the bodies of Camellia Ann Nasif Moon and Scott Stone were found in the Parksley area gun shop Moon owned with her husband. Stone was a young man the couple had hired to help out at the store.

It would be four long months before the murderer was arrested and more than a year after that before Javis Enos Holland, aka Shaft, was sentenced to life in prison for the crimes.

However, as is often the case, life in prison doesn’t necessarily mean life in prison, and this spring, Holland could be granted parole.

One person who hopes to see that Holland is never set free is Moon’s daughter, Nicki.

“It is imperative to keep this man in prison,” she said recently. “While keeping him in prison will not help me or my family, I am certain he would destroy another family if put back into society.”

Moon has good cause to believe that. In the 17 years since her mother was taken from her, she has compiled her own history of the man who took so much from her. According to her research, Holland was a member of the Thunder Guard Motorcycle Club in Philadelphia, but had spent some time on the Delmarva Peninsula prior to that fateful day.

Moon said serious criminal charges against Holland in various states (excluding his juvenile record, if any) date back to 1977 and continue through the month before her mother was murdered.

It is this extensive history that has Moon convinced that Holland should never be returned to society and that’s why she is asking that anyone who is willing — especially those whose lives were touched by her mother, a teacher in the Accomack County School System — write a letter to the state Parole Board.

“What would be helpful,” Moon said, “is a reflection on the impact my mother or Scott Stone had on the writer’s life and a request to deny parole to their murderer.”

Moon stressed that it is important to put Holland’s Department of Corrections number (193655) on the statement which should then be mailed to the Virginia Parole Board, 6900 Atmore Dr., Richmond, VA 23225, or directly to Moon through e-mail at nm1234@comcast.net or by postal service at P.O. Box 1497 in Parksley.

Moon said she would appreciate having copies of any letters sent directly to the Parole Board, since officials have indicated they may not keep them for future reference, even though Holland will be eligible for a parole hearing on an annual basis for the remainder of his incarceration.

Moon also noted that the letters must be received by the Parole Board no later than May 20 to be considered. That is the day Nicki and other members of Camellia Moon’s family will have an opportunity to present their case to the Parole Board in person.

Following the killings, Nicki felt compelled to return to school, and earned a graduate degree which allows her to work with Richmond area police as a counselor, often charged with helping diffuse hostage or suicide situations and other crises.

Perhaps the greatest tribute to her late mother, however, is keeping her memory alive through her own children. Cameron, 4, and Camellia, 15 months, are both named in honor of the grandmother they never knew, but whom hundreds of friends — will never forget.

Day,” using the “man down” button, and for reviewing non-routine events.

With regard to the part played by the Accomack County Sheriff’s Office during the incident, the report states, “In review of the incident, narratives and communications tapes from both the 911 Center and the Accomack County Sheriff’s Office, it was apparent that communication ambiguity between the 911 Center and Sheriff’s Office exists with regard to response.”

Loftus noted that issues brought forth in the document “are not intended to assign blame nor should the contents be construed as accusatory toward any one person, organization or entity... The vast majority of calls is routine and therein is the danger that we become complacent. It is only during non-routine events, such as the incident described above, that we recognize the need to review all decisions, actions, omissions, errors, and positive contributions that were part of the event in question. This very serious event has provided an opportunity for service agencies to come together and gain new insights. The end result is the development of new and more relevant policies, procedures and actions designed to increase employee/responder safety.”

According to the report, “A review of the (911) communication tape revealed several apparent breaches of policy, procedural errors and omissions during this incident. These errors did not occur as an isolated event, but continued for the duration of the incident. If supervisory staff were present, these errors should have been corrected immediately. If intervention does not occur, then supervisory and dispatch staff have failed to do the task to which they are assigned and responsible for.”

Also with regard to the role the 911 system played in the incident, the report notes, “There are communication issues in the northern end of Accomack County resulting in either poor or no reception of the 911 signal... Although in this situation the portable radio transmissions from (one of the medics) were received by the 911 Center, some were of low volume and many went unacknowledged.”

The report further states, “In this incident, the assailant was in close proximity to the portable radio when the 911 Center dispatchers called and asked, ‘Do you need the Sheriff’s Office?’ It is unclear if this statement triggered the assailant to strike, but it must be considered as a possibility given the next radio transmission came from (the medic), stating, ‘Need help,’ followed by several radio breaks. These radio breaks indicate someone was trying to key the transmit button but was unable to hold the button long enough, definitely a ‘Red Flag.’

“The 911 Center dispatchers made no effort to hail the provider making the communication, ‘Need help,’ even though a radio identifier would have been available to them on the console. This incident clearly demonstrates the need for immediate and uninterrupted communication. ... Once (the other medic) called the 911 Center and reported the ambulance crew had been assaulted, this should have been another ‘red flag’ for clearing the radio traffic and attempts made to reach Fire Medic 1. This was not acted upon. The dispatcher did not attempt to determine the extent of injuries Fire Medic 1 sustained.”

Some Dredging Projects May Get Done After All

By Linda Cicora

Accomack supervisors hope they will be awarded a $500,000 federal grant for use in dredging local waterways where the buildup has gotten so high that channel markers and other navigational aids have been removed.

Last week, the board directed Public Works Director Stewart Hall to meet with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and local Coast Guard to determine where the dredging is most needed.

Hall reported that he was able to apply for the grant at the 11th hour, but did not have time to determine what area has the most need. The grant, which requires a 45 percent match, is expected to be awarded in the fall.

“It would be nice to have a specific channel involved,” Hall said. “We have a very dire situation,” said Supervisor Donald L. Hart. “Soon we won’t be able to get out of our harbors.”

“Over the last several years, very few projects have been dredged by the Corps of Engineers, due to limitations on funding,” the application states. “This has created a large backlog of projects and that backlog is growing. … Of the 48 federal projects that have been dredged by the Corps of Engineers, due to limitations on funding,” the application states. “This has created a large backlog of projects and that backlog is growing. … Of the 48 federal navigation projects in Accomack County, only eight are considered restricted, one is considered severely restricted and two are completely blocked.”

Metompkin Bay and Wire Passage were identified as most in need.

The supervisors also voted to ask Northampton County to join them in applying for a grant to build a new burn building at the regional Fire/Rescue Training Center. The cost of the structure is estimated at $430,000.

Public Safety Director Jason Loftus said it would cost about $106,000 to update the existing structure, but he only expects those repairs to last about three years.

“It’s like any other building we have in the county,” Loftus said. “It’s a safety issue.” He warned about liability if injuries occurred because of needed repairs.

C. Ray Pruitt, captain of the Public Safety Department, said he is against demolishing the existing burn building. He contended that while actual burns should not be permitted there, the structure could safely be used for other training.

Pruitt also suggested that more grant money could be raised if the facility were offered for use by law enforcement.

The supervisors also amended an ordinance to allow the county to collect fines for convictions of loitering, shooting or hunting with a firearm or of traveling in an area where in possession of a loaded firearm within 100 yards of public school property. County Attorney Mark Taylor said these restrictions are already law in Virginia and the change is needed to direct fees to the county.

In addition, the board passed a resolution allocating 36.5 acres in Quinby to be part of the Enterprise Zone. Larry Forbes, director of economic development, said the purpose is to expand aquaculture projects at Mid Atlantic Aquaculture Tech. “It will indeed be a great asset to our county in the future,” Forbes said.

Board Wants To Extend Bay Preservation Act

By Linda Cicora

In an 8-1 vote last Wednesday, Accomack supervisors gave the nod for County Attorney Mark Taylor and Planning Director Jim McGowan to draft an amendment to the county’s Zoning Ordinance and Map that would extend the Chesapeake Bay Preservation Overlay District to the Atlantic Ocean.

Only Supervisor Wanda Thornton opposed the action.

Supervisor Phil McCaleb proposed the resolution which noted that the district “is a useful environmental protection mechanism that has benefited the public health, safety and welfare of all citizens of Accomack County and particularly those residing within its area of applicability.”

Taylor said wording needs to be amended to include areas between the two major bodies of water. The next step would be to let the Planning Commission review the draft and advise the board about it.

Thornton complained that implementing such a plan could be detrimental to farmers. She inquired how many houses would be affected.

“I’m very anxious to see after all these years” how the board will act regarding the issue, said Supervisor Donald L. Hart. He recalled when Supervisors Julia Major and Warren Nock were still living, the three were the only ones to favor such an amendment.

The bay act was established in 1988 to protect water quality from “significant degradation as a result of the use and development of land.”

The act created buffers and land disturbance regulations and requires all septic systems in the designated areas to be pumped every five years.

School Children Being Counted in Accomack County

By Linda Cicoira

A census of school-age youth in Accomack will be taken in a door-to-door canvass conducted by county school workers beginning April 1.

Dr. Rhonda Hall, assistant superintendent of Administration and Human Resources, said the count would be made of those between 5 and 19 years old, in accordance with Virginia law.

She wants to alert the public about the census so residents are not afraid to answer when the worker comes knocking on their doors. “A lot of people don’t understand,” Hall said. The effort involves counting “all children, regardless of where they go to school” or if they are home-taught. It also will include those who are incarcerated or live in juvenile homes.

The results are then used in the state’s funding formula, which determines the distribution of a portion of Virginia’s sales tax revenue that is returned to the locality for public education.

“We’re putting a lot of effort into it because we know how important the money is to Accomack County,” said Hall. “It helps the county, not just the school division. ... If the county gets more, maybe they will give the school division more.”

The counters will include school bus drivers, teachers and other staff. They will present photo identification badges during the surveys.

According to the school system’s news release, “The funds which the school division receives from the census are dedicated to facility maintenance, operations, capital projects and debt service. This funding is the school board’s third largest source of revenue.”

“The assistance of county residents with providing information to the census takers will be greatly appreciated,” Hall said.

“The paycheck is very substantial,” said Superintendent W. Richard Bull. “We try to use bus drivers because they know all the routes.”

Hall said that there will be about 45 workers making the survey, compared to 15 employees when the poll was taken three years ago. Four of the census takers will be bi-lingual. “We will be monitoring every two weeks from Jan. 1 to July 15,” Hall said.

For more information, residents can call Dr. Hall, at 787-5754 or 824-5601.

Kiptopeke’s, 62 percent of Occohannock staff members will lose their jobs and some Central Office positions will be cut. He added that the double bus run that had been proposed is no longer being considered. Bowmaster also pointed out that students in Grades 6-8 will be able to take part in a sports program and use the existing athletic fields in Machipongo. He said restrooms for those involved in the sports program are available in the Central Office and the Technology Building behind the middle school.

Following the meeting, Bowmaster said he wants to dispel the rumor that the middle school had been condemned.

Although the vote to close the school was taken early in the meeting, several members of the public spoke during the public input session at the end, urging the School Board to keep the school open. Several of those present criticized the board for not having the meeting in a more accessible location. While the room used by the School Board in the School Administration Building can handle an audience of approximately 20, it overflowed into the hallway last Wednesday. In addition to over 50 who crowded into the meeting room, a group of approximately 50 was forced to stand in the hallway or outdoors next to the windows in order to hear the proceedings.

Parents Sean and Jennifer Ingram questioned the board as to how long the problems with the middle-school building had been going on. Stated Sean Ingram, “There needs to be a plan for a middle school. Success is a plan, failure just happens. This is a failure!” Jennifer Ingram remarked, “This is a county issue, not just a school board issue.”

Larry McAllen remarked that the public seemed to be the last to find out about the proposed closing of the middle school. “You need to come up with a plan on who stays and who loses their jobs,” he said. “Some employees may leave out of fear of the possibility of losing their jobs.”

McAllen noted that the Central Office budget is 65 percent of that of Kiptopeke’s, 62 percent of Occohannock’s, 74 percent of the middle school’s, and 60 percent of the high school’s.

Taking a more direct approach, parent Robert Kern asked if Central Office staff would be taking a pay cut to help with the budget. “You don’t need $95,000 to $100,000 to live in this county,” he said. “You should be willing to take a pay cut to keep your jobs.” Kern also suggested that pay cuts be imposed on other county officials.

School nurse Melissa Blair urged the board to keep the nursing assistants who work in the school clinics. She cited the high number of students seen by the school nurses on a daily basis.

Under the current plan, two nursing assistants will be dropped.

Referring to the need for repairs at the middle school, William Denny questioned why this was suddenly an issue. He noted that when students graduate, they leave the county in search of jobs, thus contributing to a decline in enrollment. He suggested that the schools offer more vocational education and argued that moving the middle-school children to the two elementary schools will feed the ongoing “up-the-road/down the road” gangs.

Rev. Eugene Spady stated that the county can get a new jail but is closing a school. Placing pre-K through Grade 7 at one school is a bad mismatch, he said.

Jane Cabarrus told the board that the middle school is not just a building. It was built in 1954 for African-American students. “Has anyone thought about the psychological effect this change will have on our children?” she asked. “We have depressed parents, depressed kids, and a depressed county.” Referring to the vote taken earlier in the meeting, Cabarrus added, “What has been done can be undone.”

Speaking to the board through an open window, Granville Hogg noted that people are unhappy with the way decisions are being made in the county.

Melissa Glennon reminded the board that kids need the middle-school experience, and under this plan, they will not get it.

Parent Bob Bisker questioned why the current problem with the middle-school floors and restrooms was not discovered last year when several hundred thousand dollars was spent on the rear wall of the building.

Teacher Heather Marsh thanked the board for not splitting the elementary students into two groups, with pre-K through Grade 3 at Occohannock and Grades 4 through 7 at Kiptopeke. (This alternative had been discussed by school administrators.)

Sandy Taylor urged the board to let the public in on major decisions. “The public generally did not know about this proposed change until a day or two ago,” Taylor said. “Don’t keep us in the dark.”

A public hearing on the budget will be held at the middle school on March 31 at 7 p.m. The next School Board work session is scheduled for April 2 at the School Administration Building in Machipongo.

The Chincoteague bridge project has recently made some visible headway. Pilings are being driven into the ground and huge cranes tower the left side of the causeway going toward Chincoteague.

“We have reached another milestone,” said Tom Rakowski, construction manager with the Virginia Department of Transportation.

American Bridge, the construction company building the $68 million mega-structure, has recently completed all of the pile-driving for the drawbridge, or bascule span, said Rakowski.

The new drawbridge is located in Lewis Creek Channel, which will be 60 feet wide, and near the entrance onto the island— on Main Street near Maddox Boulevard, explained Bruce Garber, construction manager for Jacobs Civil Engineering.

“We recently had a large concrete pour. We poured over 1200 yards of concrete, around the clock, for 21 hours. It took over 200 truck-loads,” said Garber. He also said that beginning April 1, there will not be any activity near Black Narrows Marsh where colonial nesting birds must be protected.

However, there will be plenty to do for the estimated 30 American Bridge workers to meet the estimated completion date of November 2009. Garber said that the construction will continue west as the crew continues placing piers, or caps (they have already laid 8 of the 47 in the mainline bridge) so that they can lay the beams, or girders, followed by the riding surface, or deck. “We hope to have the mainline bridge driveable by spring 2009,” said Garber.

Progress is evident as the waterway bustles with activity during completion of the new bridge which will connect Chincoteague with the causeway to the mainland of the Eastern Shore.

From the OutPost

By Candy Farlow

Times are getting tight. The price of gas is going through the roof and the cost of milk has me longing for a cow in my backyard.

But not to worry. I can apparently afford anything I want. Why, this week alone, I’ve received two “pre-approved” credit cards with astronomical limits — not to mention all those “convenience checks.”

I guess I should be pleased my credit it is so good.

Instead, I find myself wishing that the credit companies would stop tempting me — and save a few trees in the process.

I really don’t need any more credit cards. I mean, the last one I got I applied for while in Disney World simply to get the freebies they were dispensing. I haven’t even peeled the activation strip off that one and already I’m getting offers to upgrade my Tinker Bell VISA.

I am going to hold onto it though, since I’m afraid it might eventually take a little Disney Magic to keep the old wolf from the door.

I don’t mean to complain, for I realize that I am indeed blessed. I and mine have everything we need — and most of what we want. Still, with today’s prices, one must carefully watch one’s budget — something that is much easier said than done.

For example, I’d just left home the other morning when I realized I had left some lights on. I quickly tried to figure out what the cost of the day’s electric usage would be when compared to the cost of the extra gas I would burn if I were to go back home to turn them off. About the time I realized I couldn’t come close to figuring that out without at least paper and pencil, I realized I also had left my cell phone home, so I burned the gas.

And then there is the issue of the grocery bill — and milk is only a part of that equation. The formula I have to use in determining my food budget includes a factor of one teenage boy in residence, with an exponent of four more on weekends, divided into cases of sodas and mountains of chips. Add in a couple of family dinners per week and you have a grocery store tab approaching the national debt.

I can take some comfort in the fact that I’ve saved well over $1,000 since I quit smoking over a year ago. Now if I can give up chocolate, there should be another $2,000 or so in the savings column, but I won’t allocate those funds just yet.

Right now, I’m trying to decide what to do with the check I’ll be getting from the IRS as part of President Bush’s “economic stimulus package.” From what I understand, the feds are hoping we all spend that money on new goods or services in order to jump-start the economy.

Guess I’ll go shopping since it would be downright unpatriotic to do anything else.

Anybody know where I can shop for a good milk cow?

New Effort Targets Nicotine Addiction

Dear Editor:

Dr. David Jones, Shore Memorial Hospital’s new vice president for Medical Affairs, is starting an anti-smoking protocol. It is a welcome effort to address, in a substantial way, a major problem linked to addiction. In this case, the addiction is nicotine. The list of addictions is a long one, from drugs, alcohol, and gambling, to shopping, food and video games, etc. In the future, perhaps our age will be known as the age of addiction.

While people are engaged in any addictive behavior, their emotions are blocked out; their emotions are obscure, at best. Without access to or with reduced access to feelings, we lose essential elements of mental function. Emotional awareness has the potential to guide us in decision making as to what is good for us and what is not. Without this emotional awareness, we can do self-destructive things. Smoking is an amazingly self-destructive behavior.

Hopefully, Shore Memorial Hospital’s anti-smoking effort will start lots of smokers on the road to recovery. In the future, it would be useful to expand the program to include all addictions.

Drake Always Follows Bush/Cheney Lead

Dear Editor:

Dick Cheney, Thelma Drake and George W. Bush: three peas in a pod. Thelma Drake has supported the Cheney/Bush agenda almost 100 percent of the time. Thelma Drake voted for the continuation of Dick Cheney and George W. Bush’s illegal, immoral and unnecessary occupation of Iraq. Thelma Drake sustains the Cheney-Bush massive deficits, passing this debt on to our children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Thelma Drake has supported phenomenal tax credits given to Dick Cheney and George W. Bush’s oil industry buddies. Thelma Drake is responsible for the Cheney-Bush unbelievable increase in fuel prices. Thelma Drake supports Dick Cheney and George W. Bush’s friends, the insurance companies, and the insurance companies, which has caused the steepest rise in health-care costs in world history.

Oh, but you might say that she got money to dredge a few Shore channels and performed constituent service. What nonsense! Any representative, Democrat or Republican, if he or she intended to be re-elected, would have done the same.

If you want a continuation of the same policies: more war, tax breaks for the super wealthy, $5 to $10 per gallon fuel prices, passing your debt to the grandchildren, higher healthcare prices, more uninsured Americans, having the insurance companies and stock brokers control your Social Security check, having the government listen in on your phone calls, then vote for Thelma Drake. But folks, “Yes We Can,” have better government; a bright new day is dawning. Vote Glenn Nye for the Eastern Shore.
